RE: Annual (2023) Pressure Fall-off Test
Mid-Way Environmental Services, Inc.
Davenport, Oklahoma
Permit Number IW-NH-41001-OP

Dear Ms. Young:

Enclosed please find the results of the 2023 Pressure Fall-off Test (PFT) conducted at the above referenced Mid-Way Environmental Services, Inc. (Mid-Way) commercial Class I Non-Hazardous injection well. The 2023 PFT was conducted during the period of November 8, 2023, through November 13, 2023. The PFT was conducted in accordance with the PFT Plan submitted to the Oklahoma Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) in November 2023. The PFT Plan outlined the procedures to be followed in conducting the test and for procedures to be followed in gathering static temperature and pressure data to generate and compare the current pressure gradients with historic data.

The 2023 PFT utilized four (4) 5 kpsi rated gauges; two (2) for surface measurement recording and two (2) for bottom hole measurement recording. As DEQ suggested in the October 12, 2020 meeting, Mid-Way chose to use both surface and bottom hole gauge for 2022 PFT so that a comparison can be done between surface and bottom hole gauge for the PFT at Mid-Way. Pressure transient data interpretation and curve matching was performed by a Senior Reservoir Engineer with Schlumberger. A copy of the Schlumberger Pressure Transient Test Interpretation Report (Report) is included for review. The bottom hole gauge Pressure Transient Analysis can be found in Table 3 and Section B of the Report. The static temperature and pressure readings and gradient calculations are also included in Appendix 1 of the Report. Attached Table 2 presents a comparison of the historical formation temperature, pressure, and gradient information.

To allow the well to stabilize and reach equilibrium, the injection well had not been operated for period of approximately 5 days (120 hours) prior to initiating the PFT. Personnel from Precision Wireline, LLC of Enid, Oklahoma calibrated and connected the surface recording gauges directly to a port on the injection well and set the bottom hole gauges at a depth of 5,340 feet. The facility's horizontally mounted centrifugal pump was used as the primary pump for injection and the average pumping rate calculated for the injection period was 181 gallons per minute. A total quantity of 502,320 gallons of water was injected during the test. For the PFT conducted on November 8th through 13th of 2023, the injection (pumping) period was 46 hours 20 minutes, and the monitored recovery (fall-off) period was 72 hours.

After the 72-hour recovery portion of the test, the bottom hole gauges were used to record static temperature and pressure readings at every 500 feet interval as the tool was retrieved; with a final reading at a depth of 100 feet and 0 feet from the surface.

At the completion of the test, the surface and bottom hole gauges were retrieved by Precision Wireline, LLC personnel and the data recorded during the test was forwarded to a Senior Reservoir Engineer with Schlumberger for pressure transient data interpretation and curve matching.

Parameters utilized by Schlumberger in the pressure transient analysis included:

Formation thickness (h) = 300'

Porosity (Φ) = 14.0%

Water Viscosity (μ_w) = 1 cp

Radius of the well (r) = 0.329'

Q = 6,000 Bbl/Day

Compressibility (Ct) = 3E-6

Type curve matching was utilized by Schlumberger in analysis of the pressure transient data. Based on "best fit" to type curves, the data recorded during the 2023 PFT best fits a Radial Composite Reservoir Model, indicating different flow regimes over time. The model (chosen based on the type curves) is the same as the one used during the 2022 test interpretation.

In the Radial Composite Model, the well is at the center of a circular homogeneous zone, communicating with an infinite homogeneous reservoir. The radius of investigation based on the 2023 results is calculated to be 3,000 feet.

Calculated formation parameters based on the Radial Composite Model indicate a permeability (k) of 264.43 millidarcys (md) with a 16.6 skin factor. The skin value is lower than last year's test result (In 2022, the skin value was 23).

The bottom hole pressure at the end of the fall off period was 2,517 psi, which is similar to historic pressures estimated for the well. A Cartesian plot of recorded data (pressure vs. time) is presented in Figure 1 and 2 of the attached Schlumberger Pressure Transient Test Interpretation Report. A summary of the bottom hole pressures estimated over the last several years is presented in the table below:

Table 1: Estimated Bottom Hole Pressure from the Measured Surface Pressure

Calendar Year	Estimated Bottom Hole Pressure (psi)
2010	2,495
2015	2,537
2016	2,649
2017	2,574
2018	2,509
2019	1,869
2020	2,672
2021	2,529
2022	2,536.7*
2023	2,529.27*

*Bottom hole pressure estimated at depth of 5,340 below ground surface

In Figure 5 of the attached Report, spikes in the derivative late times are associated with temperature variations.

Attached Table 2 presents a comparison of the historical formation pressure, temperature, and gradient information. The data indicates no apparent changes to bottom-hole pressure or temperature because of the injection activities. Please note that the pressure reading recorded near the top of the well head was comparable to the well head pressure observed on the facility's continuous recording equipment prior to initiating the static survey.

A01 • Main results

The pressure recorders were located at the surface to record the Well Head (Tubing) Pressure and at the bottom of the well at 5,430 ft to assess the near wellbore conditions and obtain reservoir parameters for the Arbuckle formation over the open hole interval 5,173 ft.-6,804 ft. These two pressure records were used to evaluate the formation permeability, skin factor and formation pressure.

It is also part of this analysis to compare the formation evaluation results from each pressure record, surface, and bottom hole. It is well known that surface pressure records are affected by wellbore friction during the injection phase and storage during the shut-in phase. Surface pressure gauges data was observed to be noisy. Wellhead pressures were transformed to bottomhole conditions for pressure transient analysis. It is observed that due to noise, radial flow regime is not clearly observed for WHP transform data. Due to this, a perfect match is not obtained with the data, it seems to be the best possible outcome with the current data. Bottomhole pressure transient data provided more reasonable match, as radial flow regime was observed. Also, spherical flow regime was clearly observed, indicating flow into wellbore exhibits limited entry behaviour. Vertical well limited entry model was presented here as part of appendix.

The testing procedure consisted of two main events:

* Water Injection: Recorded for ~46.3 hours (Average surface injection flowrate: 175 gal/min.

(~6,000 bbl/d). The recorded injection pressure prior to shut-in was BHP= 2,808.3 Psia and WHP= 550 psia.

* Pressure Fall Off: Recorded for ~ 72 hours. The recorded injection pressure at the end of shut-in was BHP= 2,532.92 psia and WHP= ~203.4 psia.

The injection and pressure fall off test procedure consisted of the following events:

The water fluid properties were estimated based on the reported field water sp. gravity (~ 1.005 g/cc) and down hole pressure & temperature conditions. The bottomhole and surface pressure data quality is compared in Figure 4, indicating noisy surface pressure data, which reflects in the fall off pressure derivatives presented in Figure 5.

Along with bad data quality of surface pressure gauges, fall off analysis of these gauges present two wellbore dynamics effects:

-small noise at early times in the surface pressure gauges. It is mainly marked in gauge 50548. However, it does not have an important impact in the analysis.

-spikes in the derivative late times which look associated to temperature variations. This phenomenon is mainly affecting the surface pressure gauges as presented in Figure 4. Yet an attempt is made to transform wellhead pressures to bottomhole and interpret the data, which should be considered low confidence (Appendix 1).

The results described below show the estimation of kh and skin by the log-log, Semilog and test history match. The complete injection flow rate history was considered as per Table 1 (flow rate of 175GPM or 6,000 STB/D). The main PTA results are summarized below:

Pressure Fall Off: Recorded for ~72 hours. The recorded pressure at the end of shut-in was WHP= 203.4 Psia and BHP= 2,532.9 Psia, Figure 2.

The pressure and temperature gradients performed after the fall off period from 5,340 ft to well head are presented in Appendix 2 and the respective mean gradient values are presented in the Table 3, below.

B01 • Interpretation with downhole pressure gauge data (Gauge 50781)

The diagnostic Log-Log plot for the Falloff pressure transient test recorded with downhole gauges is presented in Figure 5. The pressure falloff derivative plot was used for early and middle times flow regime identification, the log-log scale shows three main flow regimes:

- At early times, Wellbore Storage (WBS) effects were observed until about 0.14 hr. Changing wellbore storage was applied. The obtained WBS coefficient C from the time match was 0.613 bbl/psi with delta t of 0.08226 hr. The wellbore-dominated time is considered small for this type of test for a well which has been shut-in at the bottomhole.
- Pressure drop caused by near-wellbore damage was observed between 0.15 and 2 hrs. The estimated total skin value was $S = 16.6$. High skin value signifies poor connection between the well and reservoir, which could be due to insufficient or plugged perforations, some mud invasion, partial penetration etc.
- Possible Infinite Acting Radial Flow (IARF) was observed between 16.6 and 29.3 hrs. The formation properties, such as average drainage area pressure and permeability were estimated from this flow regime. Permeability-Thickness, $k \cdot h = 79,330.1$ md-ft. Considering an effective injection thickness of 300 ft (from previous report dated on Nov 2022) an effective horizontal permeability is estimated in the order of 264.4 md. Average drainage area pressure is estimated as 2,529.3 psi and the fall off test investigation radius is 3,000 ft.
- The water injectivity Index is computed as 23.1 STB/D/psi.

Graphical analyses are presented in Figures 7, 8 and 9, including field data and history match analytical model.

B02 • Spherical flow identification on Log-Log plot with downhole pressure gauge data (Gauge 50781)

As seen in figure below, Spherical flow regime was identified clearly on the log-log derivative curve. This indicating that there might be limited entry flow into the wellbore compared to formation thickness. This may be due to plugged (or partially) perforations.

B03 • Comparison of Log-Log plot with downhole pressure gauge data for 2021 & 2023

As seen in figure below, IARF flow regime stabilization levels are on lower side compared to 2021 data. Permeability-thickness derived. Possibility of creation of unintentional micro fractures may reflect in higher permeability observed. Also, higher skin values could be due to plugged perforations or partial penetration or incompatibility between injected fluid and formation causing extra pressure drop near wellbore.

Appendix 1: Wellhead pressure Transform Fall-off Analysis.Interpretation with wellhead pressure gauge converted to bottomhole gauge data (Gauge 50592)

The diagnostic Log-Log plot for the Falloff pressure transient test recorded with downhole gauges is presented in Figure 9. The pressure falloff derivative plot was used for early and middle times flow regime identification, the log-log scale shows three main flow regimes:

At early times, Wellbore Storage (WBS) effects were observed until about 0.21 hr. Changing wellbore storage was applied. The obtained WBS coefficient C from the time match was 0.52397 bbl/psi with delta t of 0.037 hr.

Pressure drop caused by near-wellbore damage was observed between 0.20 and 2.1 hrs. The estimated total skin value was $S = 21.5$.

Infinite Acting Radial Flow (IARF) was not clearly observed for the fall off data. The best possible match was still attempted with the data and results were presented below in figure 9.

Graphical analyses are presented in Figures 9, 10 and 11, including field data and history match analytical model.
